Public can have say on latest oil drilling update

A campaign group is urging residents to have their say on the latest stage of a long-running legal battle over oil drilling in the Lincolnshire Wolds.

The decision to approve an oilfield in Biscathorpe was quashed in July last year following a Supreme Court judgement after a claim had been brought in by SOS Biscathorpe.

Last year, justices at the Supreme Court said emissions created by burning fossil fuels should be considered when granting planning permission for new drilling sites.

The public have until 28 July to submit their opinions on further information submitted by the developer, Edgon Resources, on the potential climate impact of burning extracted oil.

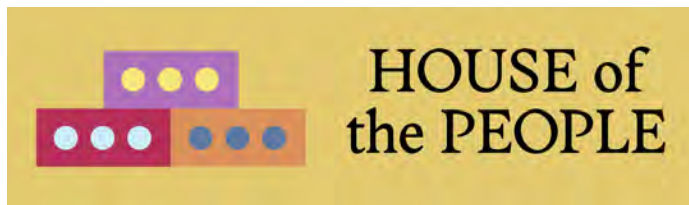

Mark Abbott, chief executive officer at Edgon Resources, said the company had submitted an assessment of the greenhouse gas emissions at the request of the Planning Inspectorate.

The documents can be viewed on the planning applications portal on Lincolnshire County Council's website.

The application for an oil well at Biscathorpe was initially refused by Lincolnshire County Council in 2021, but the company successfully appealed it before it was taken to the High Court.

Please support our campaign to protect the Lincolnshire Wolds and ensure a healthy, liveable planet for future generations.

House of the People

Democracy is the pride of Britain, but it's out of date. That's why ordinary citizens are building the House of the People. It's a new national voice to decide what people in the UK really want, not just those at the top.

Anyone in the UK can take part. It's free and open to the public. It belongs to everyone and is funded by your donations. It will listen to science and hear from people from all walks of life.

Rising fascism. Climate collapse. Social breakdown.

To face these challenges we must change the way decisions are made with a new chamber of democracy:

A House of the People.

Politics is broken, so people are now picking up the tools to fix it.
